Renga Launches on the App Store: A Calm, Privacy-First Poetry Ritual for Daily Life

February 2026

Renga, a new iPhone app, invites users to turn their year into poetry through a simple daily ritual: writing one haiku each day. Over time, these short poems form a visual calendar: A personal portrait of the year captured in verse.

Inspired by traditional Japanese renga structure, the app also enables collaborative poem chains that alternate between three-line and two-line verses. Participants contribute one verse at a time, sharing the poem through simple file exchange rather than social feeds or cloud accounts.

Renga is intentionally minimal and private. All writing is stored locally on the device, no account is required, and optional tip jar in-app purchases support development without gating features.

“In a digital environment often dominated by noise and metrics, Renga offers a quieter space for reflection and creativity,” said Arto Ushan, creator of the app.

Renga is available now on the App Store for iPhone.
